In today's issue, I am trying to make you think positively. By presenting you with several different analogies / comparisons / quotes, I'm hopefully going to turn on your brain switch if an effort to help you determine how to help others. That is, after all, one of our primary reasons of being here on earth,, isn't it? With that being noted, here are a couple of comments to start your journey of thinking how you can help others positively.

1. Isn't it interesting that everyone wants to be your friend when you have something they want?
2. Have you noticed that people with goals succeed because they know right they are going?

Finally, because I have and will continue to stress the importance of being and remaining happy in life, I'll end today's issue with this observation and declaration:

3. A happy person does not have everything right in his or her life, honestly, they just happen to have the right attitude about it.

I feel like singing: "That's my story and I'm sticking to it."
