“Orlando”. For many, it probably means a nice Florida resort where you can enjoy Walt Disney World. Here at Hosanna, “Orlando” has a different meaning. It is the name of a resident friend who is my neighbor/suite mate. I’ll admit my fondness of his ability and willingness to always keep our restroom and shower clean and presentable to anyone at all times. But more importantly, he is very fun to be around and a delight to watch as he jokes around with other housemates, Kirk and Terry. Although his actions and kindness as a roommate have been wonderful so far I do believe his latest friendly move truly deserves recognition and a lot of sincere thanks. I am impressed with comments giving praise and hinting at giving others help, but am more a believer in actions speaking louder than words. I was and still am amazed at what Orlando did just recently. I was sweeping outside around the house when Orlando walked up and said: “Connor, you always do a good job, but I think you need some help. You shouldn’t do this alone.” He walked around the corner, returned with a rake and wheelbarrow, and said “give me some piles and I’ll pick it up.” We worked together for an hour. The facility was so clean, and I’ll never forget Orlando’s help. Thanks, Manghane!
